

Application for RNAi Screening at ICCB-Longwood

ICCB-Longwood welcomes applications from Harvard Medical School and Harvard Hospital-affiliated investigators. Applications must be submitted each time a new screen is proposed. We are currently accepting applications on a rolling basis. If the facility becomes oversubscribed we will institute a waiting list. Please note that current applications for RNAi screens will not be reviewed until mid-April 2006.

Fees are charged for access to RNAi screening at ICCB-Longwood. This fee helps us to recover some of our operating costs, and the final amount is still being determined. It will likely be in the range of $3,000-$8,000. The fee is in addition to the cost of assay reagents and supplies provide by the screener. The fee will be charged only once screening is underway and not during the development phase of the screen. Please contact Carline Shamu if you have any questions.

For more information about working at ICCB-Longwood to carry out screening projects, please see our website, <http://iccb.med.harvard.edu>.

Often, investigators request a Letter of Collaboration for grants intended to fund a screen. Please understand that we can only write such a letter if we know that we can accommodate your screen. Therefore, please try to submit your Application to screen at the ICCB-Longwood well in advance of grant deadlines, and please warn us if you expect to need a Letter of Collaboration.

Please send any questions about the ICCB-Longwood Screening Application or evaluation process to screeniccb_apply@hms.harvard.edu.
